This thematic set of activities is designed to be used over 22-26 school days. Esperanza Rising is a book that teaches the concept of perseverance and not being afraid to try something again. This is similar to the concept of the Phoenix rising from the ashes. This theme is expressed several times in the book. The teacher should note that Esperanza Rising several times makes references to Catholic beliefs, rituals, and traditions. It may benefit the class for the teacher to give a brief summary of Catholic beliefs. The book also deals with prejudice. Students in the class may have some preconceived concepts, such as prejudice towards Hispanics. The story addresses the belief that is held by many students that all individuals that migrate from Mexico are poor and/or illegal. It may benefit the teacher to address this belief, in a subtle manner, when the opportunity arises in the story. One of final projects requires the students to produce a power point covering the Mexican Revolution, American Depression, and/or Mexican plantations. This may also present a good opportunity for the teacher to discuss a part of Mexican and/or American culture and history that is often overlooked. Please note, the first three pages of the book are an introduction to the book. There are no worksheets or activities for this section. It should be read by the teacher to the class as an introduction before beginning chapter one, Grapes. The teacher should bring to the attention of the class the quote: “Wait a little while and the fruit will fall into your hand.” This quote becomes the theme of the entire book.

Day One—Introductory Activity—There are two possible introductory activities for this book. The teacher does not need to do both activities, but he/she may choose to. The first option for an introductory activity is for the teacher to give each student a small container of play-doh and a sheet of clean, white paper. Students should then be told that they have 10 minutes to make a “creative piece of art” from the play-doh. The teacher should be prepared for complaints for this activity; however, the teacher will need to stick to this time frame to be able to teach the concept of having to start over. After the students have finished their pieces of art, the teacher should go around the room and ask each student to explain what he/she has created. After the teacher has given each student a chance to explain his/her play-doh creation, the teacher should ask the students if they are happy with their creations or if they think they could create something better with more time. The question should be asked in such a way to have the students acknowledge that with more time they could create a better quality play-doh sculpture. The students should then be told to take their hands and squash their creation. The assignment for the evening is for students to take home their play-doh and return with a better quality sculpture. The teacher should provide a secure room where students may place their creations the following morning. It is also suggested that the teacher encourage students to take their time to create a really nice play-doh sculpture. The teacher may wish to award small prizes for the best sculpture, the most detailed work, and the most creative work. The teacher should offer something that encourages students to spend 20-40 minutes actually working on improving the sculpture.

The section option for an introductory activity would be for students to play a game of “Around the World” on a basketball goal. Around the World is a game where players have to hit a certain number of shots in order to win. Students begin in one position and shoot the ball. If they make it, they move to the next position. If at any time a player misses, he/she may challenge the miss by shooting again. If, however, the player misses the next time, his/her turn is over and the student must start at the very beginning. Like the previous activity, this activity challenges the students to take chances and to not be afraid to try something again. If this activity is chosen, the teacher will need to ask students to create a drawing showing something in their lives that has caused them to Day Two— For students doing the play-doh creation—Have each student place the play-doh creation on his/her desk. Next, walk around the room and have each student describe his/her creation. After the creation is described, ask the student how long he/she spent perfecting the creation. Ask each student if he/she thinks that the new creation is better or worse than the creation that they originally made in class. For classes that played Around the World, students should first describe and then display their pictures on a community board. Through a student-led and teacher-directed discussion, students should come to several realizations. The first is that if you do not have immediate success then you should not be afraid to begin again. The second is that to be successful at any task takes time and patience.

The teacher should then say:

The book you are about to read is a true to life story and is based on a real person. It is a story that contains events from the life of the author’s grandmother. Most of the events and conversations in the book did not take place as described in the story; however, the events described in the story happened to many families of Hispanic descent. The story is of a young Mexican girl who comes to America.

After reading this statement, the teacher should pass out a book to each student. After passing out the books, the teacher should go over the three learning strategies that students will be using in this book. It is suggested that the first chapter worksheet be completed as a class activity. This allows the students as a class to understand what is expected of them throughout the book.

Book activities: Three reading/writing activities will be used while reading this book. All three strategies will be implemented on the same worksheet.

The first reading strategy involves looking for a particular word in the chapter that answers the clue on the worksheet. Before the students begin reading the chapter, the teacher will need to hand out a chapter worksheet. The first activity on this worksheet asks the students to find the answers to a series of clues. After finding the answer, students will be instructed to place the answers on the spaces that match each number below the clues. For example, the first clue may state: A red fruit that grows on trees and is plentiful in Washington State. Each letter of the answer, apple, should be placed on the corresponding lines below the clues. The teacher should stress to the students that the answers will be the exact number of letters as there are spaces. The instructions then tell the students to circle the letter that fills the space that matches the number at the end of the spaces. For example, if the number four follows the answer apple, the students should circle the letter “L” because it is the fourth letter in the answer. In general, the clues come in chronological order in the chapter.

The second reading strategy involves finding the theme of the chapter from the clues given on the first part of the worksheet and then writing a paragraph on that theme. Students will be taking notes by underlining. Students should be shown that the circled letter from the top part of the worksheet form a word that they will now write on the blank line it in the middle of the page. Students will then need to write a paragraph on the back of the worksheet on how this theme is touched on in the chapter. Students may need help in two areas for this activity. First, students may need added instruction on how to write a thematic paragraph. For example, if the theme is happiness, students should be instructed to look for examples of how the main character experienced happiness in the chapter. Second, students may need help in identifying how the fruit named at the beginning of the chapter exhibits the theme for the chapter. Depending on the student’s comprehension, abstract reasoning, and writing skills, the teacher may wish to give some leniency in grading this section at first. The teacher should hold students to higher standards after students have written several of these types of paragraphs. It is important for this strategy for the teacher to stress that students will need to reread the chapter and underline/highlight events that help set the theme for this chapter.

The final reading strategy is a type of sticky-note discussions. The teacher should inform students a week or two before reading the book that they will need sticky-notes for this book. For this chapter, sticky-notes are used by students while reading to mark interesting or humorous incidents, or for students to mark an area where they may have questions while reading. Students should mark at least three items while reading the chapter. These items then should be written at the bottom of the page by the Sticky-note Discussion section. After the worksheets have been turned in, the teacher should take a few minutes to read some of these sticky-note observations to the class and spend a few minutes discussing the better observations. This activity could be done every two to three days in class.

Experience the Book! Activities: There are four potential Experience the Book! activities for this book.

First Experience the Book! Activity: This activity could actually be an ongoing activity done at the beginning of each chapter. Chapters in this book are not numbered but rather given the names of fruits or vegetables—grapes, peaches, asparagus, etc. This activity may be done in several ways. First, regardless of how the teacher uses these fruits and vegetables, it is advised that the teacher read the section to the class from the Q & A with Pam Munoz Ryan in the back of the book. One question asks why the chapters are named after fruits and vegetables. Mrs. Ryan explains that Esperanza’s life goes through cycles like the planting season, so she wanted the book to go through cycles as well. It is advised that before the class begins a chapter, the teacher should bring in a small portion of the fruit or vegetable that is the title of that chapter. Students could then eat the fruit or vegetable that will help establish the theme for that chapter. The second option would be for the class to eat these fruits and vegetables at the end of the school day to other students in lower grades.

Second Experience the Book! Activity: The second Experience the Book! activity should be done after the reading of chapter 4, Guavas. In this chapter, Mama makes a yarn doll for a little girl on the train. In the back of the book, there are directions on how to make this yarn doll. The students should spend some time making several yarn dolls. The students should then give these yarn dolls away at the end of the school day to other students in lower grades.

Third Experience the Book! Activity: The third Experience the Book! activity should be done after reading of chapter 7, Almonds. This activity involves watching a video on either the Great Depression, the Mexican Revolution of the 1920’s and ‘30’s, or a video on the life of Mexican immigrants during this time. This video may be one good option: Classic Mexican & Mexican American Culture Films DVD: (3) 1930s – 1960s Mexico & Mexican Food, Family, Culture, & Traditions and Los Angeles, California & Mexican American Family Culture Films
This helps to give students a realistic look at life for migrant pickers in Southern California.

Fourth Experience the Book! Activity: The fourth Experience the Book! activity should be done after reading chapter 11, Peaches. Several times in the book Jamaica Flower Punch is mentioned. Like the yarn doll, the directions on how to make this punch are written in the back of the book. The class should spend one day making and drinking this unique punch/tea. It is advised that the teacher purchase hibiscus flavored tea rather than actual hibiscus flowers.

Final Projects: There are four possible final projects for this book. The teacher may wish to assign all four or only a portion of them. It would be best to assign all four to the better readers.

The first final project will take time and should be assigned immediately. It is to memorize at least ten proverbs from the book of Proverbs. Esperanza’s father quotes a great proverb to her at the beginning of the book, “Wait a little while and the fruit will fall into your hand.” The teacher may wish to reference this web page to choose ten great proverbs: http://www.allgreatquotes.com/bible_quotes_proverbs.shtml

The second final project should also be started early in the reading of the book. This project requires the students to create a power point presentation on one of the historical events/aspects mentioned in the book. These include but are not limited to: Mexican plantations, The Mexican Revolutionary War, migrant workers, The Great Depression, The Dust Bowl, and labor strikes in California. The teacher should produce a rubric for each student to follow for this activity. It is suggested that the power point presentation be between 10-12 slides and finished by the time the book is completed.

The third final project is for each student to do a family tree or family history on his/her family. The story of Esperanza is loosely based on the grandmother of the author, Pam Munoz Ryan. Pam gleaned this information by talking to her grandmother. The teacher should encourage students to do the same with their parents, grandparents, great-grandparents, and any other family members. The extent of the project should be up to the teacher. Projects may include a literal family tree, a brief family history, or a short story of a family member, similar to Pam’s story of her grandmother.

The fourth final project is for students to help those that are less fortunate than themselves. This activity can be open-ended and may include a canned good collection or clothes collection. It would be beneficial for the teacher to help the class adopt a family in need. The class could possibly adopt a family similar to Esperanza’s that was burned out and forced to leave home. The emphasis should be placed on how the class can work together to help someone in need, much as Esperanza receive assistance in rising from the ashes of her life. Since crocheting plays such a big part in the story, the teacher may wish to find someone who can come in and help teach the students how to crochet a blanket or scarf for this needy family.
